"what are you?"
"what do you mean?"
"i mean, what are you? hippy, collegiate or greaser?"
"does it matter?"
"of course it matters. if i don't know what you are i won't know how you feel about things."
"well, how about if i tell you how i feel about things. and you can tell me how you feel.
if we talk and really listen to each other i bet we could learn a lot. don't you think?"
"maybe, but i still won't know what you are . . ."

"i like to be alone sometimes. just to think-you know. to remember what really matters and what doesn't. we all have to take time out to think about things. if we didn't we'd be like machines almost-just doing the same things day in and day out without even knowing why. but we're people, not machines, and there's a big difference. isn't there?"

"some kids say that heights is too big but i like it here. there's always so much to do, like cheering at games, and going to dances, and just having fun with my friends. if only my american history teacher would ask for my opinion sometime; and if my gym teacher knew my name . . . but i guess you can't have everything."

"pass me in the hall and swiftly go your way
as i go mine,
we mumble "hi"
and slightly smile; and sometimes if we have the time we'll pause to try to wave;
but i don't know your name (what is it?)
or why you laugh or why you cry,
but still we pass and nod and slightly smile."

annual homecoming weekend features peanuts theme heights tenth annual homecoming began at seven o'clock friday morning, october 24, when exhausted but exuberant students from eight organizations dragged their completed floats onto the football field. although varied, every float displayed the theme of peanuts, with leading celebrities charlie brown and snoopy. an assembly friday afternoon with guest speaker dan coughlin of the cleveland plain dealer set the stage for the celebration, as he predicted a sure win for heights. the parade of floats began, and choir's winning float was presented to the audience.

the heights tigers met the brush arcs at the friday night game and trampled them 26-0. at halftime the homecoming court was introduced and sarah beeler was crowned homecoming queen. festivities continued at the victory dance after the game.

200 couples danced to the music of the selective service at the semi-formal dance on saturday night, while other students managed to have fun on their own. it was a weekend that few heights students will easily forget.

after weeks of hard work, choir members rejoice at the announcement that they have placed first in the homecoming float competition.

a magic memory-filled moment is created for sarah beeler, heights' 1969 homecoming queen.

summer school 69 encourages self-understanding for 1625 students this past summer, school never did end as they continued their studies in heights' summer school classes, supervised by principal john farinacci. summer school '69 presented a wide range of studies. self-understanding was stimulated by new approaches to conventional curriculum with the help of field trips, movies, and educational t.v. the new courses of human behavior, philosphy through literature, and social protest in democracy emphasized the relevance of traditional areas of study to contemporary situations. media technology, an in-depth study of t.v. and radio communications, attracted those interested in the various fields of broadcasting. summer school '69 also saw twenty-eight students graduate after fulfilling their english credit.

presenting an opportunity for teachers to experiment with new curriculum, study techniques and new methods of teaching, and for students to supplement their education, summer school '69 proved to be a rewarding experience for all involved.

heights service staffs perform variety of jobs for students, teachers

aiding both students and faculty, heights service staffs proved indispensable by keeping school facilities in smooth operation. often acting as mechanics, custodians were responsible for maintaining safe conditions in the building. preparing lunches for a hungry student body occupied the cafeteria staff. our secretaries performed a wide assortment of duties, ranging from processing transcripts to reminding unit counselors to keep their appointments.

directed by mrs. rosen, the tiger's den successfully completed its second season as a center of relaxation and social climbing. the addition of a juke box this year enlivened social room atmosphere, and provided funds for student council projects. under mrs. rosen's guidance, the tiger's den has become a permanent heights institution.

a new era of communication accompanied administrative change, and led to important renovation at heights. principal james o'toole abolished regular supervised study halls for all students, creating a less restrained atmosphere. throughout the year he encouraged genuine involvement in the educational process.

curriculum was the responsibility of albert daugherty, assistant principal, who initiated courses in contemporary culture and home economics. his success in incorporating work-study and english-history fusion programs into the curriculum, was partly due to his membership on the curriculum advisory council.

assistant to the principal, edwin galley, organized office administration, scheduling, and non-academic programs. regulated by superintendant of schools, frank gerhardt, and the board of education, our administration has kept heights one of the top high schools in the country.

a change of attitude prevailed in the atmosphere of the unit offices this year. counselors and principals succeeded in reaching their goal of generating more student involvement.

led by mr. farinacci, unit c helped seniors plan their futures. college conferences and computers were designed to place those who planned to continue their education. the work-study program, a prerequisite to job training, employed students whose main interest was in the business world.

unit a, headed by miss ryan, strove for a better relationship with the junior class. counselors discussed future goals and helped students organize a meaningful senior plan of study.

the unit b office organized the sophomore class early, allotting plenty of time for class projects. mr. wisely's main concern was to help the new heights students adjust to school life.

a closely-knit relationship between student, teacher and advisor, characterized the unit offices throughout the year.

math courses stress basic concepts

continuing its tradition of providing a solid educational foundation, the math department challenged eager students with abstract concepts. under department chairman thomas englert, teachers emphasized basic axioms, imaginative thinking, and clear study approaches.

math-enthusiasts were motivated to further study by the large assortment of courses offered. college-bound students with high ability probed into advanced calculus and probability courses, while computerized programming allowed others to combine their math, science, or business courses for maximum effectiveness.

although nothing new was offered this year, there was a boost in overall mathematics enrollment, indicating student interest. with a greater importance being placed on this field of study, new math programs are sure to be developed in the near future.

science at heights underwent a year of planning. although no original programs were actually instituted, several were put into formulative stages. due to the continual discovery of relevant scientific data, the department was also constantly updating its methods and means of teaching.

according to mr. charles williams, science department head, teachers of the laboratory sciences have had to stay extremely flexible. many have supplemented their knowledge at night classes and summer institutes, so that they could keep their students up to date on scientific innovations. they have also initiated the use of new equipment, such as the frictionless air track in physics and the recording "ph" meters in chemistry. additional experiments have reinforced theoretical instruction, keeping the heights science courses in step with the latest scientific adjustments.

"who am i"? was a question heights english students had to ask themselves this year. the english department's theme was self-understanding, achieved through creative writing and in-depth study of literature.

films, along with records, tapes, and closed circuit television were used more than ever in teaching english classes. each room was sufficiently equipped so that the media could be brought directly into the classroom.

combining english with two other subjects, the flexible pilot program enabled english students to devote more time to the subjects that personally interested them. the new method of process training was employed in many english classes, as well as other courses. designed to increase student communication, process training groups practiced solving task-oriented problems. in doing so, students developed a better understanding of themselves and better relationships with others. they showed how the heights english department is always improving through new ideas and updated methods.

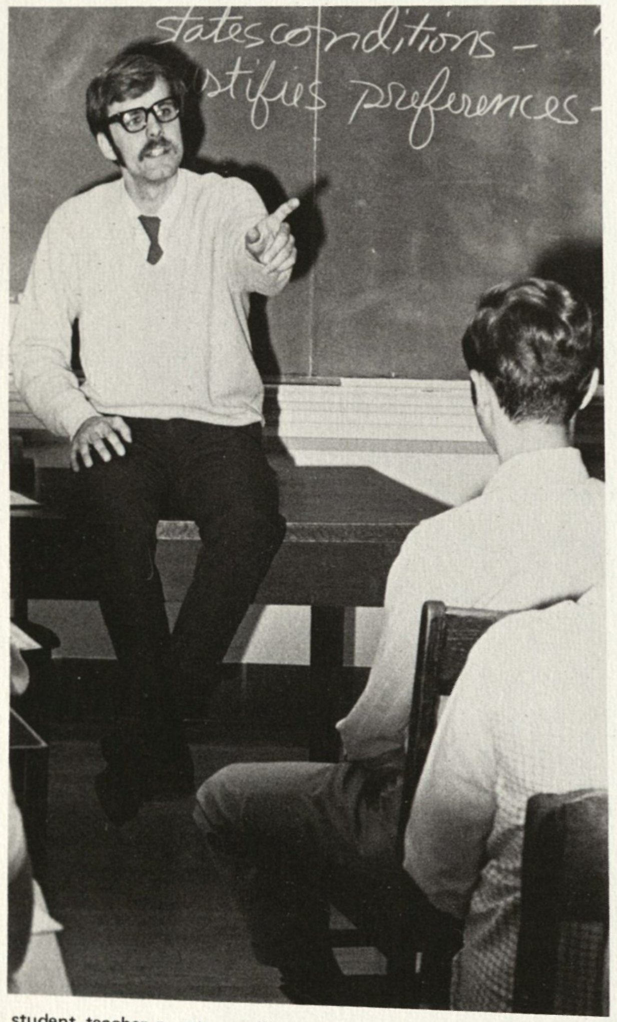
relaxed atmosphere stirs interest in social sciences



student teacher r. peterson illustrates a point of historical interest.

contemplating relevant social issues, miss elizabeth russo leads an informal and enlightening discussion in her flexible pilot social studies program class.

offering a more colorful array of new courses than ever before, heights' social studies department underwent important changes this year.

developed to fulfill history and english requirements, the newly adopted humanities programs gave students the opportunity to broaden their knowledge of both fields of study at the same time. mr. william waight taught the english and american history phase while mr. robert voytas instructed the english and world history course.

under the guidance of miss elizabeth russo, the newly adopted "flexible pilot social studies program" produced interesting results. by sometimes straying from the often mundane subjects of american and world history, students had a chance to discuss pressing social and political questions in an environment of relaxation and informality.

in retrospect, heights' social studies department succeeded in creating a new atmosphere in the study of the social sciences.

better communications initiated by foreign study, language labs

to promote human understanding and cultural enrichment through communication was the goal of the language department this year. a group of eighteen heights russian students helped achieve this goal by touring the u.s.s.r. over the summer vacation. accompanied by russian teacher miss anna salehar, they learned about the country and its people while improving their knowledge of the russian language. cities visited included moscow, leningrad and kiev. according to department chairman donald day, the foreign study program reached its initial goal of acquainting heights students with a different culture.

in classes better communication was also achieved by the increased use of the language labs. students perfected their pronunciation and listening skills and gained a better understanding of foreign language.

library, media center help students keep up with the 'times'

serving as a lounge, study hall and browsing room, the library enabled heights students to do outside research right in school. with the help of more modern equipment, our librarians managed to keep up with all current technology. a new printer made it possible to duplicate written material in demand, while video tape recorders enabled classes to be "t.v. taught." microfilm of the new york times and various magazines was also made available, saving space for the library and time for the students.

supervising students and assisting them with all the new equipment kept the librarians on their toes. their knowledge of reference and research materials proved invaluable throughout the year.

deca, work-study incorporate jobs into daily curriculum

occupational work experience, including work-study, deca, and diversified home economics programs provided 75 heights students with semi-skilled and unskilled jobs as part of their school curriculum.

the work-study program included english and elective courses, taken in the morning, while the afternoons were left free for on-the-job work experiences. students were also offered vocation theory which consisted of lectures, films, and tapes on personality analysis, living skills, consumer education and budgeting. most of the participating students were financially independent.

heights' chapter of the distributive education clubs of america supplemented student business and retailing jobs with classes on retailing principles, fashion, advertising, management, stock control, and window displays. club meetings and luncheons centered around leadership development and social intelligence. a fund raising project enabled deca members to give a banquet for their employers. deca's success at heights was proven when the chapter came out on top of all other ohio chapters in net savings.

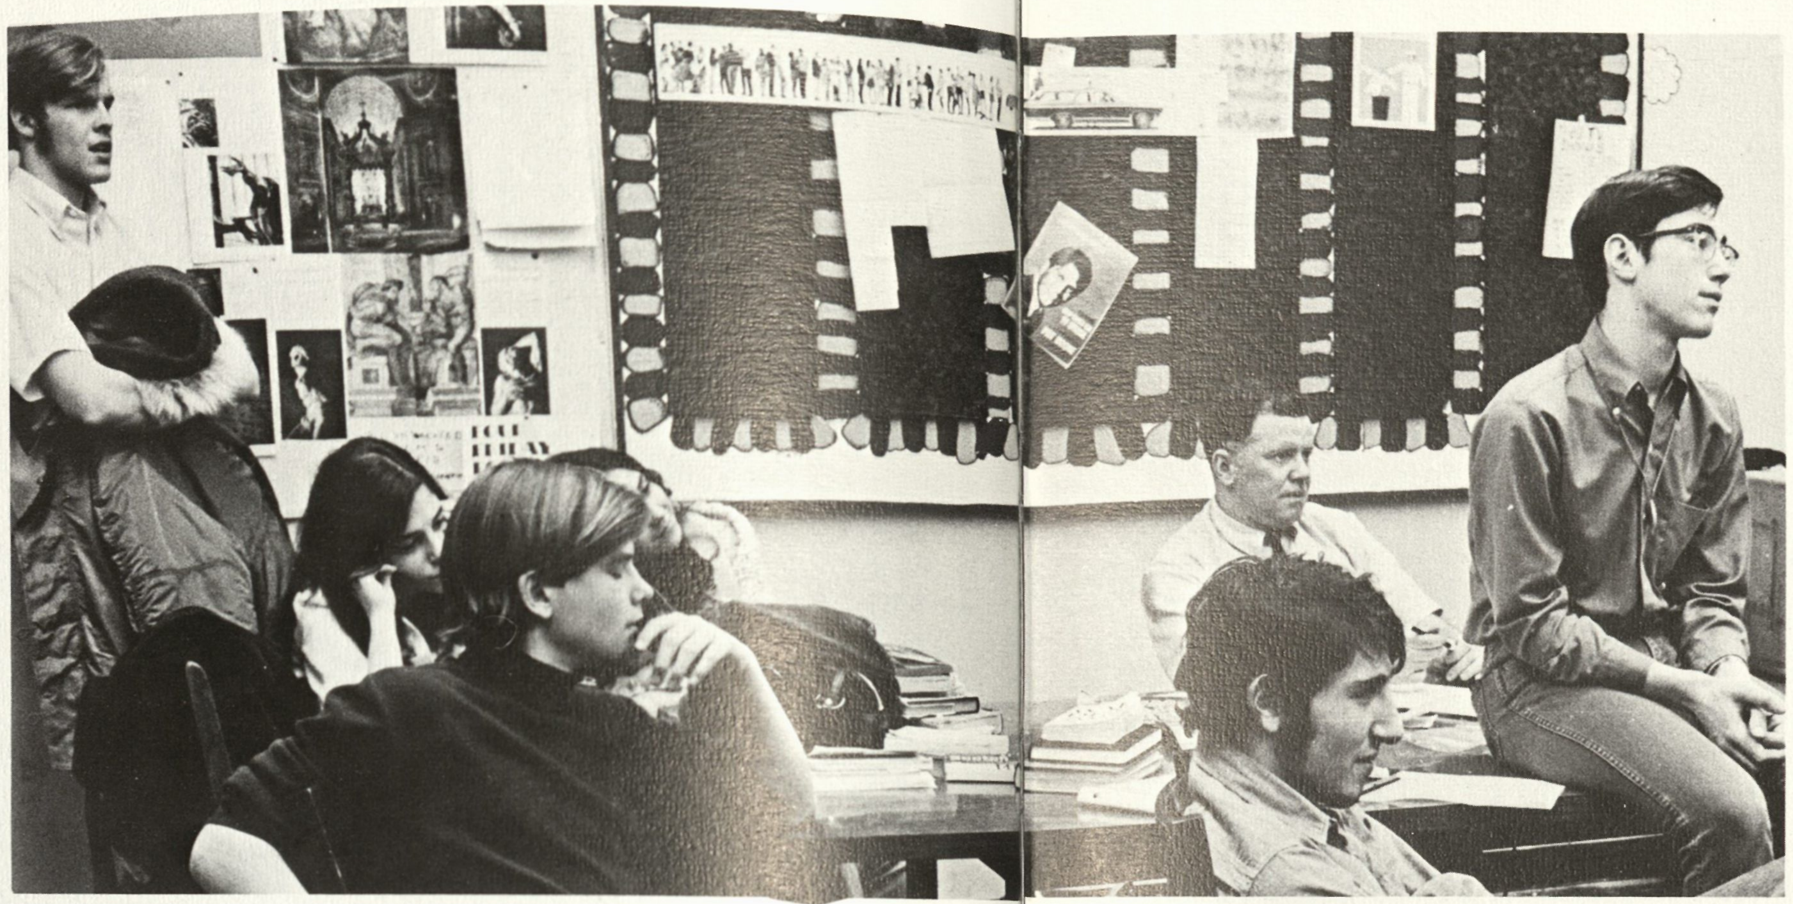
flexible, fusion programs stir interest in independent, informalized learning independent study, seminars, and informal classroom situations, indications of a progressive learning institution, created a new trend at heights this year.

although there have been independent study programs in past years, they were never before offered in as wide a range of subject areas. with the aid of interested teachers in the history and english departments, two new branches of independent and informalized studies developed: the flexible pilot program and the history-english fusion program.

while most students were grinding over the conventional required reading of their classes, flex program students, under the guidance of english teacher louis salvator, and history teacher john mulroy, chose readings and topics of controversy and social significance. bull sessions, seminars, and teacher-directed discussions and lectures gave the students independence to express themselves freely on matters vital to their education.

fusion, another innovative idea adopted this year, served just about the same purpose as the flex program, only that more structured methods of teaching were used. sophomore fusion studies were directed by world history teacher robert voytas, while william waight, american history teacher, guided the junior program. both sophomore and junior english phases of the program were directed by bernice van sickle.

as heights has been evolving as a less structured and authorotarian institution, its social and educational trends have begun to accept the fact that students are and can be responsible. in this way, heights has begun the process of preparing students for "today."



flex students and teachers find time to sit back and listen to presentations, debates, and discussions led by other members of the program as well as guest speakers.

nhs, q & s members display outstanding abilities, talents

serving as heights' two honorary student organizations, the national honor society and the quill and scroll are alike in that membership in both is selective.

scholastic achievement, character, leadership, and service to the school and community, were bases for membership in the national honor society. in order to be eligible, a student must have a 3.5 grade average upon completion of the eleventh grade, or a 3.0 average upon completing high school. the final decision regarding nhs membership was left up to a committee of teachers and administrators. newcomers to the organization were given a chance to get acquainted at an invitation tea in the spring.

heights' three publications, the caldron, black & gold, and crest, honored outstanding staff members by electing them to the quill and scroll-a distinguished literary organization.

cleveland heights football can only be described as explosive this season. despite a number of setbacks including injuries to key players, an outbreak of infectious impetigo, and the forfeit of the opening game, the tigers bounced back to become one of the most respected teams in the city. passing for a near-record of 1357 yards, they will long be remembered for their great versatility and persistance.

among the season's highlights were the upset victory over shaw and our homecoming victory over brush, where dream team quarterback joe urban threw a 73 yard scoring bomb after finishing a double inside reverse. urban, along with halfback dave larned and tackle harvey horwitz made all-league selection. next year coach gibson promises to top this season's 5-5 record with the help of junior lettermen and junior varsity team members.

coach mann commented that this team displayed "one of the better team efforts" he's seen at heights. seniors paul darke and rick hoffman, along with junior craig jones, were consistently together at the finish line, providing the bulk of harrier points. the team also placed second in the district event and third in regional competition.

coach mann also noted that interest in cross country was lower than usual this year, with only four sophomores on the team roster. however, he is hoping for a better turnout next season.

completing its second season, the heights ice hockey club successfully competed against other cleveland area high schools. although this year the team was able to practice in the new cleveland heights skating rink, all games were played at the downtown arena. the club was advised by heights teacher, jack fyffe, and coached by bob coates, who is also the hockey coach at case western reserve university. led by captains bill arnold and jeff buller, the team played against lakewood, benedictine and st. edwards high schools.

also playing its second full season of games was the soccer club. coached by mr. wallace, players practiced every day after school at cain park. although our field was not suitable because it had no goal posts, heights participated in away games at neighboring schools, including university school, shaker, euclid and brush. according to captains jeff johnson and matt london, the soccer team is looking forward to a successful season next year, with a larger schedule of games.

led by lightweights, tiger matmen gain experience

led by a strong lightweight section the heights grapplers gained valuable experience this year, which they hope will put them in contention for the l.e.l. title next year. although the team was plagued by illness and inexperience, coach joseph geiger is confident of a vastly improved team for next season.

outstanding wrestlers were bill weir, boasting a 7-1-1 record, bob vallarelli, and paul friedman. weir will be returning next year, along with varsity members mark lubline and mark thomas. in the sectional tournament weir and friedman placed second, while vallarelli and thomas came in third.

according to j.v. coach frank obernyer, juniors dave cummings and al zajac will also help next year's varsity squad, as well as sophomore prospects barry herman, doug leary, and al stallworth.

determined heights basketball squad hustles for victory

the long heights basketball season came to an end this year when the squad was eliminated from the sectional tournament by a powerful brush team, a game characteristic of our entire season. a major reason for losing so many games was the lack of a big man, which cost us several heartbreakers: a double-overtime loss to l.e.l. co-champion brush, a single overtime loss to shaker, and a defeat by towering valley forge, after scoring 95 points.

to compensate for the lack of a tall player, the heights team became one of the fastest moving in the city. always exciting to watch, coach tager's tigers produced the surprise of the basketball season when they upset area powerhouse shaw in a strong team effort. stuart goodfellow, dave allenick, and all-league selections mark bianchi and everett heard alternated high point scoring honors in each game. next year the heights basketball team will be given another chance, and with the help of present j.v. players, they'll be ready to take it.

swimmers top season with third place district finish

a decisive third place finish at the highly competitive district meet highlighted a long tiger tanker season. this was the highest district place yet for swim coach fred hoffman. however, the dual meet record of 7-7 can only be described as disappointing in view of so many outstanding individual performances.

co-captain jay hachen, state qualifier in the 100-yard butterfly, rallied the team to upset powerful euclid. junior freestyle ace jim davis and co-captain ken epstein won nearly everything they swam, netting top places at the district and state meets. this pair also broke several school, pool, l.e.l. and district records throughout the season. seniors stu simms and brian harris added valuable points in the diving event, while jack dempsey ended up with a fifth place in the district 400-freestyle.

coming in for a strong finish, sophomore shelly gold demonstrates his skillful stroke and swimming potential in the 100-yard butterfly.

the precision of a perfectly timed pass, the crash of a volleyball spiked across the net, the speed of a record-breaking sprint—all seem natural to the superior athlete. however, an accurate performance is more often the product of hours of practice, training, and self-evaluation. heights' top athletes, members of h-club and yellow jackets, demonstrate this hard-working spirit by combining determination and skill to earn letters in varsity sports.

yellow jackets are chosen from participants in any of the girls' interscholastic sports: field hockey, volleyball, basketball, and tennis. besides serving at all sports banquets, this year's 28 members sent g.i. packages to vietnam for christmas. under the direction of its advisor, miss judith bruning, the group sponsored a bake sale and class button sale to pay for an overnight held in february.

comprised of letter winners from the various varsity sports, h-club aided at football and basketball games, and held a football ticket sale in the spring. to raise money for their annual scholarship, the 50 members, under john cappelletti, sponsored a basketball game between the harlem diplomats and the men's faculty. newly initiated this year were letterman's jackets, a variation of the class jacket traditionally worn at heights.

agile varsity, j.v. cheerleading squads go all out to fire spirit, enthusiasm

what are cheerleaders? they're eight noisy personalities that dress in black and gold every friday night and yell cheers at heights' football games. why? to spark student involvement and bolster the teams' spirit.

led by captain nancy nolan, our energetic varsity squad sponsored bake sales and after-game dances for funds, and breakfasts and parties for fun. practicing jumps twice a week and advising their j.v. counterparts occupied the rest of their time.

chosen on the basis of personality and skills and known for their unlimited enthusiasm, junior varsity cheerleaders promoted underclass spirit at all j.v. games. their devotion to heights has surprised and pleased their new sponsor, miss cesa.

whether doing splits or twirling batons, the heights tigers and majorettes continued to inject a big boost of spirit into friday night football games.

working closely with the varsity cheerleaders, head tiger mary lariccia and her ferocious group led heights fans in noisy support of our team. with the help of their new advisor, miss mary lou cesa, the girls polished their sparky gymnastics to perfection.

the focal point of this year's halftime activity was the twirling spectacle of the heights majorettes. led by head majorette lorri patton, the group complimented marching band routines throughout the season. highlighting the closing football game, the majorettes initiated a new routine with fire batons. besides their halftime duties, the girls marched in the wixy-may co. christmas parade and the heights memorial day parade.

throughout the football season, both the tigers and majorettes proved to be an integral part of each game.

under miss judith bruning, g.a.a. sponsored numerous service and social projects, including a pot luck dinner and a collection drive for the underprivileged.

selected by miss daisey m. horn according to their athletic skills, gym cadets led exercises and officated class games during their assigned gym periods. they also very conveniently avoided swim class. an overnight with the swim cadets, painting the girls' locker rooms, and a bake sale highlighted their activities this year.

athletically-inclined girls take part in sports-oriented organizations

strenous competition and skill at its finest were exhibited by the heights girl's interscholastic teams. each session, characterized by practices or games held four nights a week culminated with a pot-luck dinner for team members at mrs. martin's house. mrs. martin has coached interscholastic teams for the three years they have existed at heights. miss stern, assistant coach this year, helped her coach skill techniques and theory.

new rules set up by the ohio high school athletic association permitted twelve scheduled games instead of the eight game schedule of previous years. the o.h.s.a.a. also required that refreshments be served after all games to break down competitive barriers and return the atmosphere to a social, feminine one.

besides timing swimmers, posting the times, and typing records of each meet, swim timers took on the responsibilities of publicizing the meets, cheering the team on, and giving aftermeet team parties.

swim cadets, swim club play it "wet & wild" at their annual water pageants

"wet and wild" was the theme for this year's swim cadet g.a.a. pageant, held on november 19. officers linda lahman, carol fisco, debbie holaday, and karin klarreich led their cadets through endless "walkouts" and "water practices", preparing for this show and their spring pageant in april. teaching swim classes, selling candy to finance the pageants, and counting towels kept the cadets in condition.

"tiger lillies" was again the name of the girls' swim team, a branch of the heights swim club. the swim club also offered synchronized swim clinics to its members, and sponsored endurance swims and co-ed water polo games.

student council initiates improvement in school policies

student council sought to broaden its scope by encouraging more participation from within the school this year. in order to improve itself, the council revised its constitution, organization, and election procedures. to establish better communications with the student body, it circulated a newsletter and appointed a grievance committee. an all student assembly at midyear stimulated increased rapport.

taking a more active role in school functions, student council proposed alterations in the gym program, and planned a seminar day when all formal classes were cancelled. representatives were placed on the curriculum advisory council, and attended p.t.a. and board meetings.

becoming more involved in community affairs, council participated in controversial television discussions concerning draft and prison inadequacies. it sponsored fall and spring charity drives and took part in the international "brothers' brother" program.

as in the past, heights student council had several academic exchanges with other schools, tended the snackbar and concession stand, and held a number of annual social events.

men's chorus devotes time, energy to concerts

working hand in hand with girl's glee club, the men's chorus maintained its traditional musical quality. exerting equal amounts of time and talent, the group produced superb performances at both their winter and spring concerts. outside performances were also given by various special groups and the girl's glee club-men's chorus ensemble, which performed at public square during the christmas holiday season.

proving themselves to be successful businessmen, men's chorus members sponsored several effective fund-raisers, including a light bulb sale and a theater party at the movie "paint your wagon." numerous smashing parties with glee club added spice to their social life. their year was highlighted by their spring tour to montreal, quebec, and niagra falls, where they performed at various schools and churches under the direction of mr. william thomas.

choir received its share of publicity this year when the u.s. state department asked the group to perform the rumanian national anthem at the davis cup tournament, held in cleveland in september. in october, the department invited choir to tour yugoslavia—the first such invitation to a high school organization. however, the proposed tour was not recognized by the school board, so a tour of boston was planned instead.

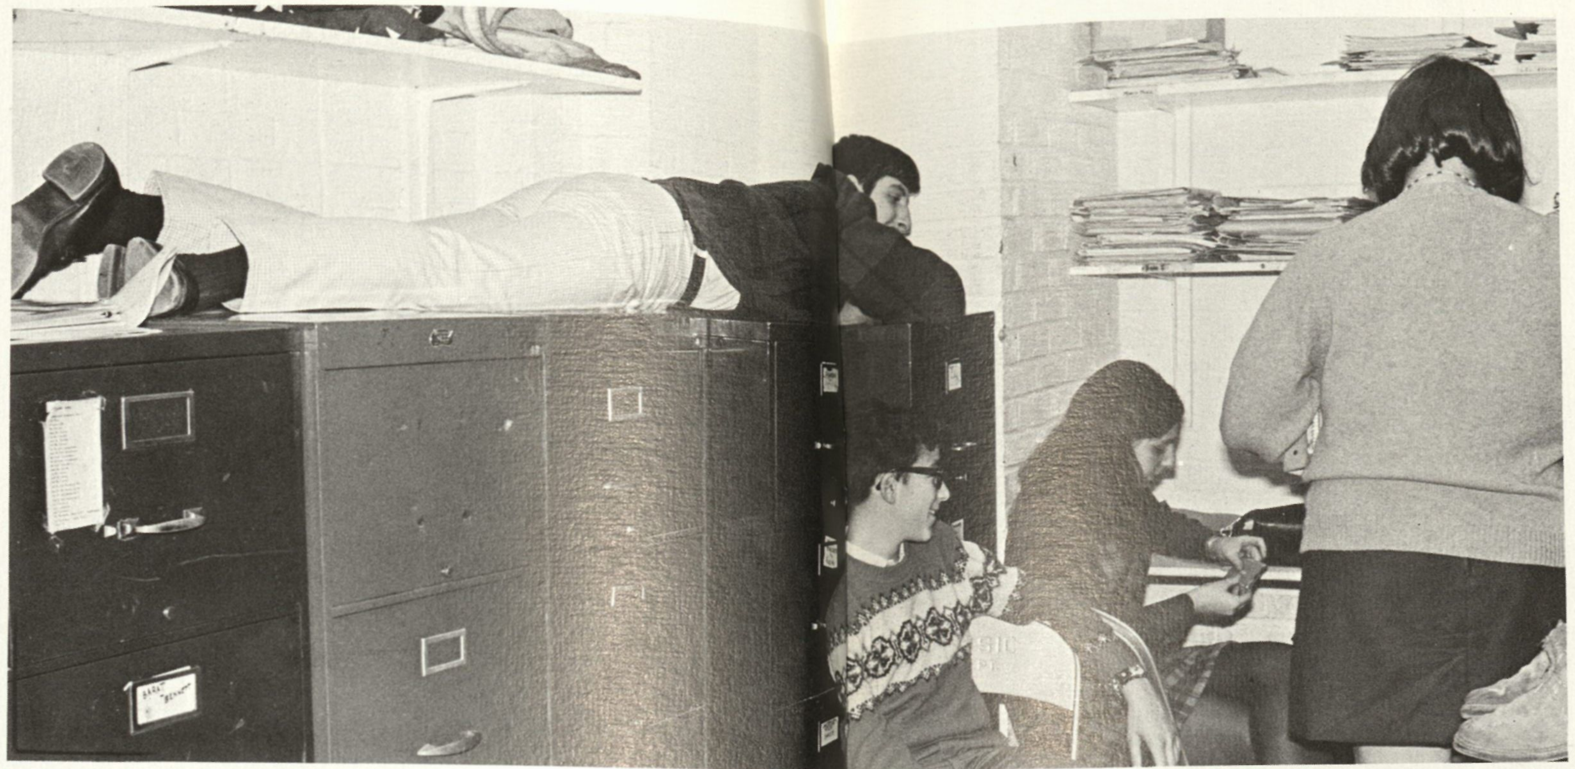
band's "wonder working power" helps create flair in concert, on tour



finding time for a brief interlude between practice sessions, band members retreat to the solitude of the band library room.

with sights set on the south, heights' instrumental music department worked towards perfection. meeting with the problems of getting used to a new school, recently appointed director robert bergantino, managed to produce an excellent performing group.

during football season, both directors and officers devoted endless hours to create a lively marching band, comprised of members from all four band organizations. after school practice sessions and 7:30 morning rehearsals out on the football field contributed to the band's success.

under the guidance of director darl marvin, stage band and symphonic band equaled the concert band in performance. a spring tour of virginia and north carolina highlighted their year.

a new monthly recital program provided new responsibilities for the orchestra this year. an outside guest performed at each recital, and individual orchestra members were given the opportunity to perform. according to orchestra director robert bergantino, these recitals proved extremely successful.

among the other orchestra concerts were a small concert for parents on the night of open house, and a performance in january featuring the music of american composers. once again the orhcestra maintained its reputation as one of the finest performing groups in the area.

'the impossible years' come to heights

"please excuse linda from gym as her father used her for lsd experiments and she doesn't know who she is in the afternoon." provoking considerable laughter from heights students, this line will always be remembered as a highlight of the all school play, "the impossible years". the plot centered around the problems of a teenager, portrayed by joan liezman, and the bigger problems of a teenager's parents, played by david brooks and pamela whitfield. adding to all the family troubles was the boy next door, portrayed by evan gordon.

mrs. dora heintz, who has been directing plays at heights for six years, commented that she had read through several plays before deciding on "the impossible years". she also remarked that the attendance was very good for all three performances.

depicting a normal everyday teenager, linda bewilders her parents, dr. and mrs. kinglsey, after she tells them she flunked physical education.

a.s.c., boosters strive to incite forgotten school spirit

what's a football game without the boosters to sell ribbons and cheer the team on to victory? sponsored by mr. murphy, this year's boosters club added spirit to all school activities. before home games, booster members decorated goal posts and coordinated the pep assemblies. the beat shaker breakfast was the climax of the year for the booster club.

the sole purpose of the girls athletic service club was to sell and collect tickets for all heights home games. both organizations served as heights high's strongest athletic supporters.

confidence in the team runs high as competitive cheers and breakfast.

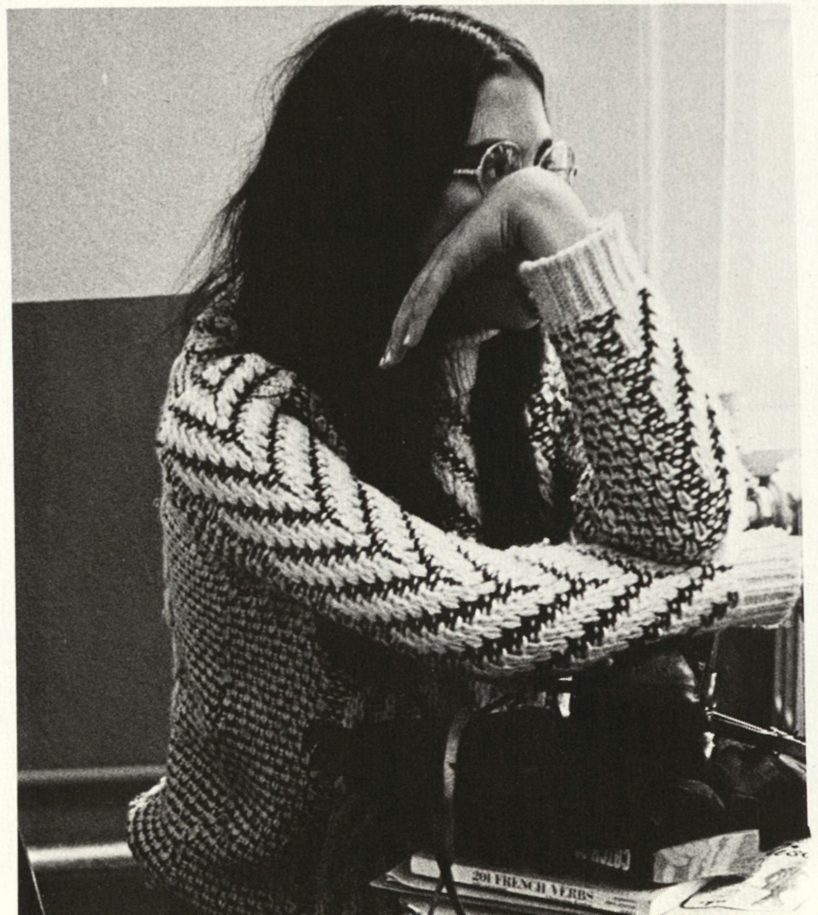
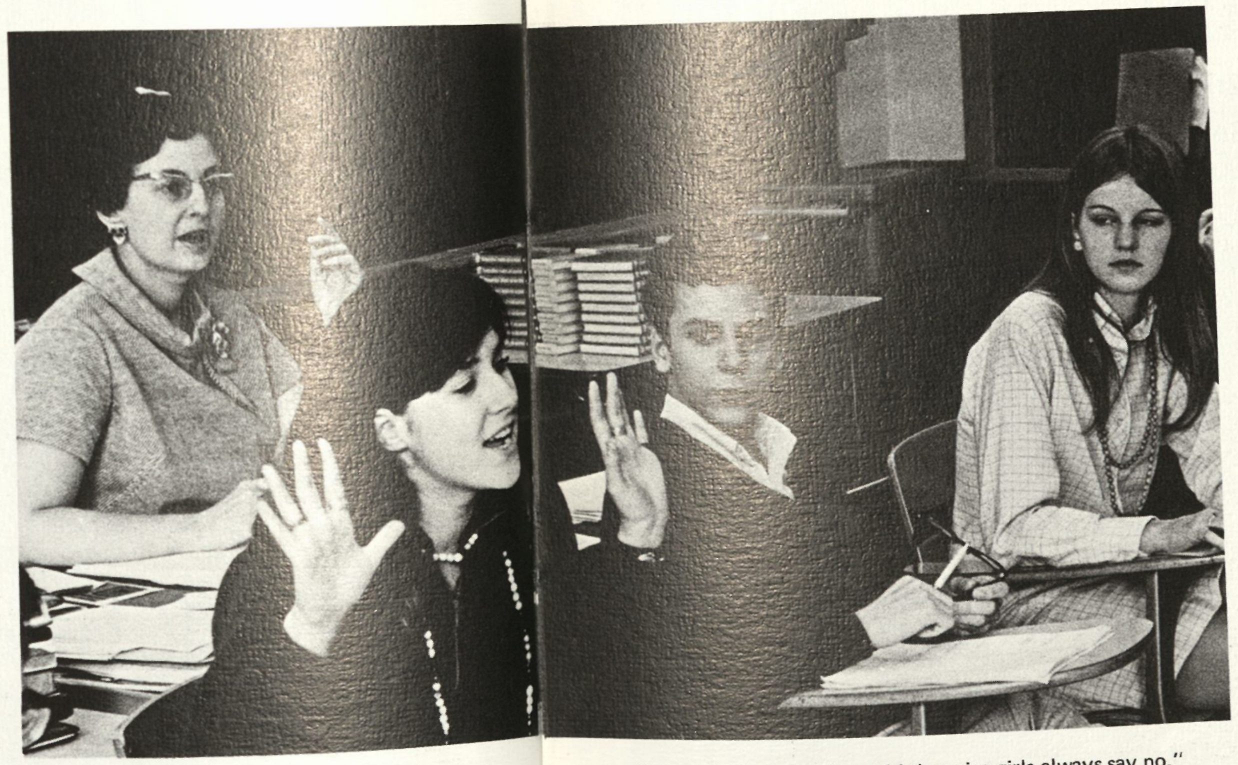
literary enthusiasts display talent, express emotion in heights' crest





" . . . and little red ridinghood said to the big bad wolf, "but grandma said that nice girls always say no."

crest, the heights literary magazine reflected the voice of the student through artwork, prose, poetry and photography. rated last year as one of the top two high school literary magazines in cleveland, crest once again maintained its high standard of creativity.

this year crest sponsored the 1970 scholastic creative writing award contest for heights students, giving them an additional opportunity to express their ideas.

under the guidance of miss amer, the staff published two magazines during the school year, choosing material for publication by democratic vote. their unique combination of literature and art made crest a truly outstanding publication.

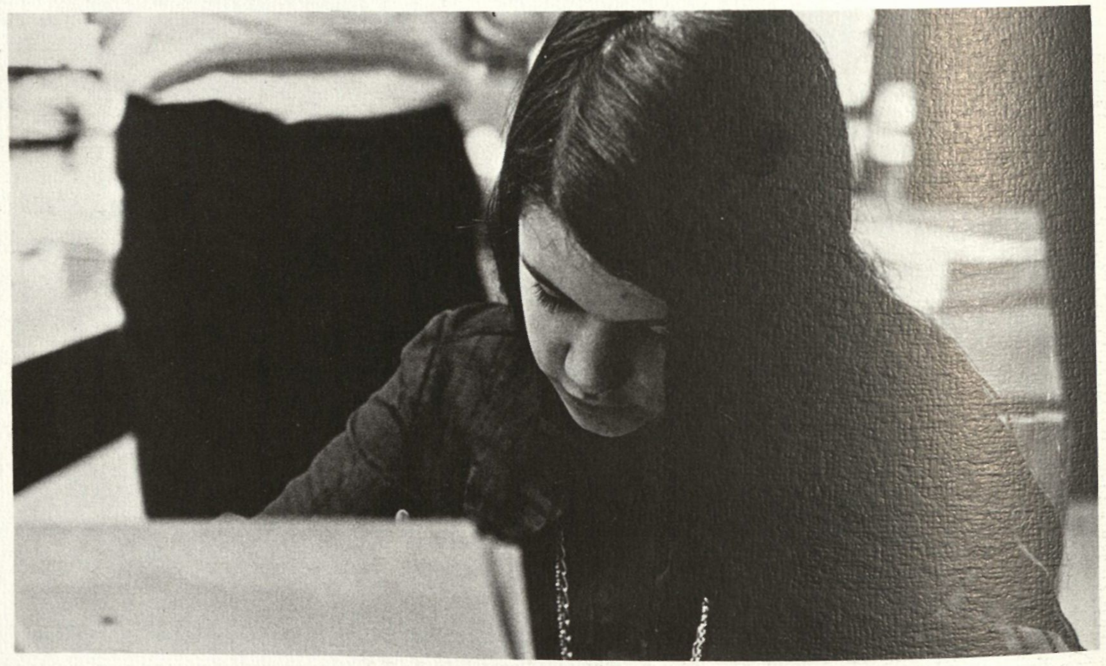
b & g aims at stimulating student awareness



a contemplative mood envelopes debbie van kleef as she diligently proofreads an article for the black and gold.

mrs. p. neville, adviser, helps the staff acquire improved skills and techniques.

the black and gold aimed its efforts at increasing student awareness this year. published bi-weekly, it succeeded in objectively presenting news, sports, and activities concerning heights. b & g also provided for expression of individual viewpoints. editorials and feature articles, often consisting of humorous and controversial approaches to popular issues, highlighted each edition.

among the awards earned by the black and gold were the gallup award for writing from the quill and scroll, and first class ratings from the national scholastic press and columbia scholastic press associations. under mrs. neville, the b & g staff maintained its standard of excellent content and format.

1970 caldron depicts student diversity

layout editor, comrade, and ex-trapeze artist, fran pergericht.

grease, hippie, black, collegiate; such is the diversity of cleveland heights high school. with all of these separate entities, it is difficult for a school publication to depict heights as a specific type. accepting this challenge, the staff of the 1970 caldron set out to create a yearbook that would portray heights as it really is.

under the guidance of advisor, mr. louis salvator, and editors, fran pergericht and barb greenwald, several alterations were made within the yearbook itself. a completely candid student life section was added, showing what heights kids are like out of classes. co-photography editors, marc schiff and gary bond, worked with their staff in taking a broader scope of pictures characterizing all social and cultural groups within the school.

besides taking a fresher approach to the question of what a yearbook really is, the rest of the caldron staff worked on the written and mechanical aspects of the book which are so vital to its success. long hours were spent in room 208, where staff members labored over assignments and deadlines.

now that the book is completed and in your hands, we wonder if we have succeeded in creating something that you, the students, like. our efforts will only be known with your appraisal. with this in mind, we hope that you find the 1970 caldron to be no ordinary yearbook.

sophomores' attitudes, outlook change with their new experiences at heights

from the first day of school, sophomores have been changing—continually discovering new things about heights and about themselves. they've developed some ideas, formed some opinions, made some friends, set some goals, and have begun to realize what it's all about. in the next two years they'll change some more, and when they look back on their sophomore experiences they'll laugh. but they'll never forget . . .

juniors linger in the middle; a perspective they'll always remember

juniors are in the middle of things, half-way in and half-way out of their half-dreams for tomorrow. they linger around the middle of the stairs, thinking, laughing, talking. the same place the seniors were, the same place the sophomores will be. they wander up and down the halls, not with the meek uncertainty of sophomores, or the oh-god-do-you-believe-it's-almost-over-ness of seniors, but with the typical, junior assuredness. half-way up from the bottom, half-way down from the top, heights is theirs, in the perspective they'll always remember—the middle.

sr. year focuses on lasting friendships, good times

sophomore smorgasbord, class parties with ten people present, floats that flopped, countless boxes of polly doodles, all are at an end. perhaps the class of '70 didn't accomplish everything it set its goals on but no one can deny that it had fun trying. although some may doubt the existence of spirit, those who have been active can surely testify to the excitement of participation.

for some, the past three years have been a continuous series of football games, dances, class council meetings, committee meetings, pep rallys, baseball games, and still more dances. for others, they meant coming to school at 8:29 and leaving promptly at 2:45. and for some, they were years of creativity and expansion, of learning about oneself and about others.

the senior theme might have been "communication-'70", because ours was the class that broke the communication barrier with congratugrams, dessert bowls, and student-run assemblies. although the class of '69 was in the process of change, we are the product of that change, and will surely succeed.

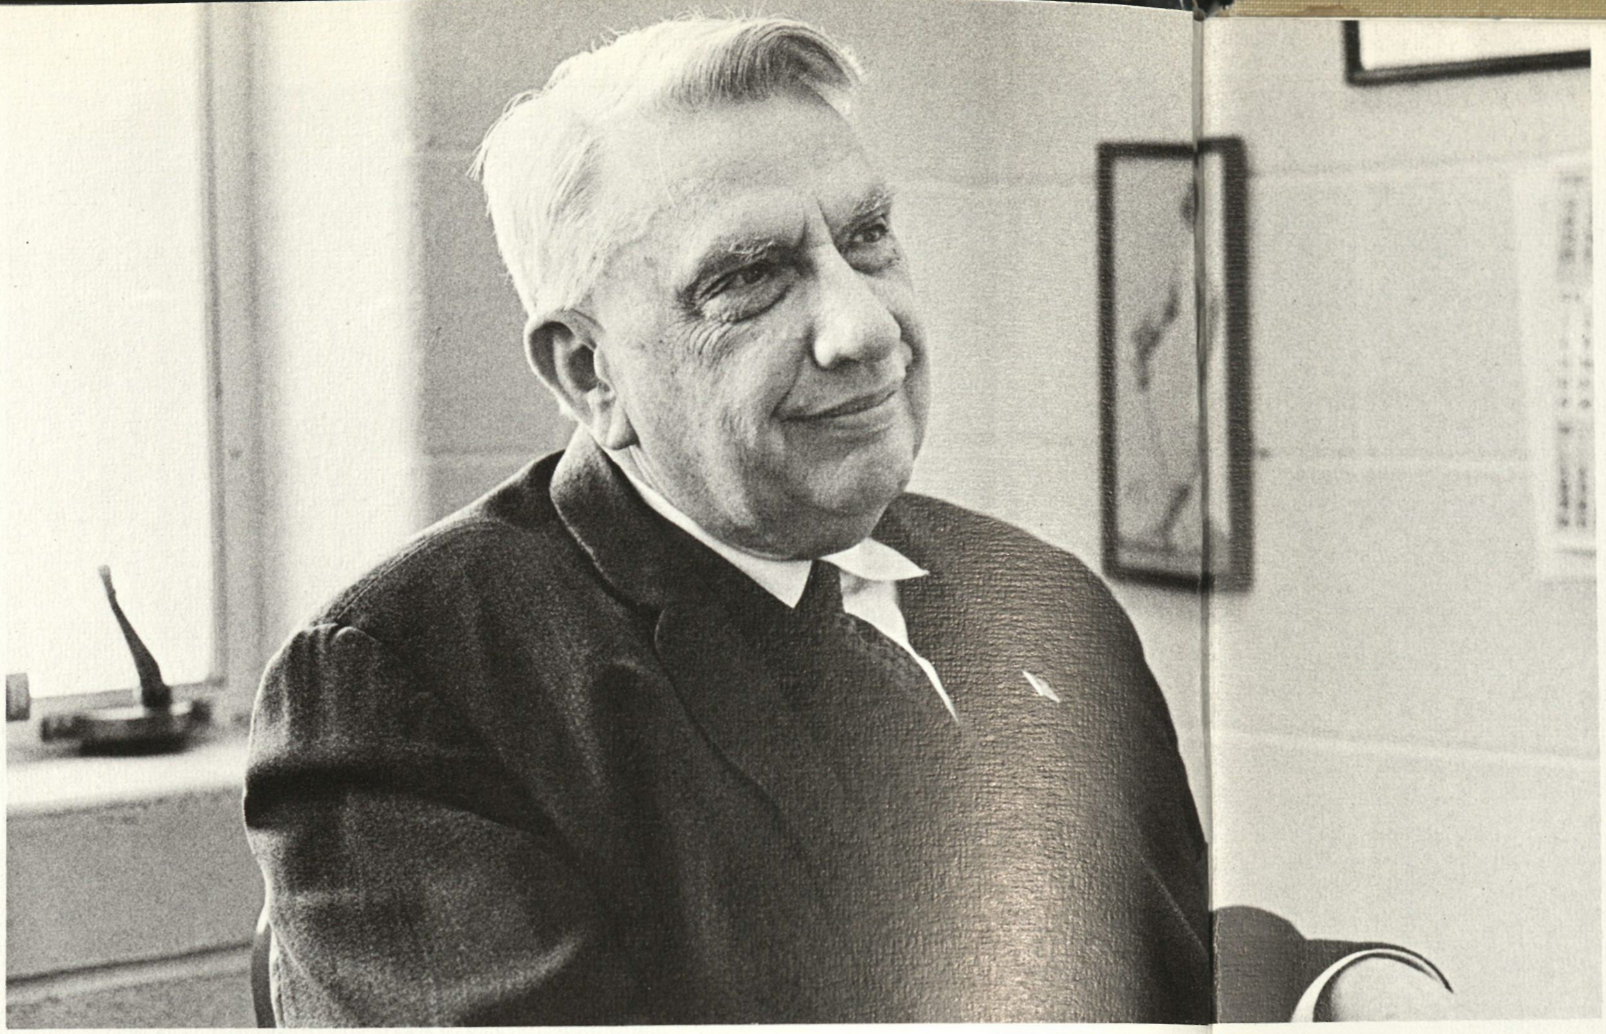
in memory of mr. peter semersky, whose unexpected death saddened all those who knew him, we've reprinted the following article from the january 16 issue of the black and gold.

"the death of english teacher peter semersky has been felt by students and teachers alike.

a member of the heights faculty for the past 13 years, mr. semersky taught english classes and for several years guided the black and gold staff as journalism teacher. he also served as a caldron advisor for six years.

during his years at heights he volunteeered to teach program four students and did so with compassion and understanding. in addition he readily accepted the challenge of teaching honors classes.

mr. semersky was considered a dedicated and talented teacher by his peers and the students. his presence in the english department and at heights will be missed."



1970 was the last year at heights for assistant principal albert daugherty, who is retiring. walter p. kincaid, director of education in the school system and a personal friend of mr. daugherty, has written the following tribute to him.

"albert daugherty's career in the cleveland heights-university heights schools spans the decades. he came directly from the university in midwinter in a raccoon coat and pork-pie hat—"joe college" himself. with characteristic energy and foresight he plunged into the task of helping the junior high school science teachers transform a dull, shallow course into a model curriculum years ahead of the field. fresh from triumphs in big ten college matches, he coached boys in fencing and was more agile than his best pupils. never one to follow the crowd, he relaxed by painting landscapes and writing poetry. he wrote good poetry—and he still does. his skill with a pen is well known—a staunch advocate and a worthy opponent, his keen wit tempers his incisive logic.

but his real impact has been his influence on people of all ages. albert daugherty is an inspiring teacher; in the classroom he has few peers. he has been confidant and guide to generations of adolescents in four of our five secondary schools, and more recently to dozens of young teachers. a family man who lives quietly, he has friends everywhere. an administrator of unquestioned integrity he has had a hand in the development of most of the exciting new courses in the high school. as a professional he has made his mark on the curriculum—but that will pass. his mark on our lives will endure and deepen with the years. albert daugherty, we salute you!"

creation of 1970 caldron reflects hard work of many

there are many people who have contributed to the making of caldron, 1970. the caldron staff has spent hours after school, organizing individual pages. our photographers have taken and retaken countless pictures of heights students and their activities. mr. salvator, our advisor, saw us through several crises during the year.

and there are others who weren't editors, or staff members, or photographers, but also devoted much time and patience to create a memorable yearbook. under mr. rauss and mr. sztul, the business staff handled our sales campaign, balanced our budget, and helped distribute the completed book. lisa houck did the unique drawings found on our divider pages. all the individual senior and faculty pictures in the book were provided by mr. stan jung of photoland studios. the poem in our introduction is entitled "passing faces", and was written by dorothy handelman, a former heights student. katie agin, our typist, was indispensable.

as caldron's editors we have received invaluable guidance from mr. jim parkinson, our company representative. we have also had an unforgettable experience. we hope that you get as much out of caldron as we have.
